O! my bright and blooming lassie! Maids more stately well may be, But no statellest maiden ever Breathed a smile so sweet as sho.

O, my bonnie, blithe, fond lassie, Mild as bloom on hawthorn tree, Rich as June and ripe as autumn, Flower and fruit in one is she.

Saw you ever cowslip warmer
When the zephyrs came to woo?
Saw you bright-eyed speedwell peeping
'Neath the hedge with purer bine?

Warmer than her keen pulse keeping Time to all things pure and good, Bluer than her bine eyes swelling In young love's divinest mood? Softer float: no plumy sea-gull Than her boson's heaving charms, Swan on lake not whiter swimmeth Than the whiteness of her arms.

If I had the brush of angel, Dipt in colors rich and rare— No! no trick of brush or pigment Ever limned a form so fair.

Let them limn who live in dreamland, Where the brain-born phantoms sway; I have feasted on the substance, And the shadow pales away.

I will not make dainty mockery With a painted, thin display, Of a life that breathes and burgeons With the fullness of the May.

I will see my dear Scotch lassle In the rays that sweep the hills, In the bright, far-shimmering ocean, In the silver finshing rills. I will see her where the wandering frees suck honey from the brue, Where the marvis to the marvis Pours his rich, full-threated lay.
